Appendix 2

Important things to consider when printing products

Cliché

To depict an image or a text for a print, a cliché must be produced on a plate, sleeve or roller. This is a costly process that is partially subsidized by the factory. The production of a cliché is a one-time cost and the same cliché can be used several times. The plate, sleeve or roller has a limited lifespan and can be worn down or destroyed by wear and tear and a long delay between uses, e.g. rust.

Location of print

When correct proofing is approved and the printing process is to begin, it is important to know that the placement and size of the print can vary by +/- 5%. This is because the print always moves vertically and laterally. At 100% printing area, there is usually an unprinted area approx. 2-5mm into the sides of the bag, for example, which can be perceived as a white stripe. Even the bottom fold can become white, but we always try to aim for as large a print surface as possible.

Colors

To get the color you want on your print, we use a color scale called the Pantone scale. Important to know is that Pantone does not produce the color used in printing but is only a reference from which color deviations may occur.

When printing on plastic, there are also a number of other factors that affect the color such as temperature, humidity and viscosity. These are factors that change throughout the printing process and mean that the color shade can vary within the same lot and within different productions. A color printed on an uncoated material (e.g. paper) and a coated material (e.g. plastic) are experienced differently because the material absorbs different amounts of color. It is therefore important to specify the color based on the correct Pantone scale; "Uncoated" or "Coated".

Materials 2nd edition

The second edition is produced in the same way as the first and usually looks the same, but there may be some deviation in the color shade, thickness and transparency. This is because the raw material may have a different luster or shade, etc.

Recycled material

Recycled material is such material that has been on the market and used and that has then been handed in to a recycling center to be used again. The material is cleaned and thinned out to see what can be used for the various products. This process and the fact that the material has been used before means that it will not have the same luster as the raw material and thus the color of the print may be affected.

The material undergoes an extensive cleaning process that "wears" the surface and causes it to become a little rough, which means that you can experience white dots in the print. With a recycled material, you cannot get as perfect bags as with new raw materials, but you make a better choice from an environmental perspective.

Printing original

Logos or images must be in the file format vectorized ai, eps or pdf format with specified pantone colors (PMS colors). The resolution must be (Rgb/CMYK) 300 dpi or higher. Single color plates and Bitmap, min. 800 dpi. Photoshop: document saved in TIF, EPS, PSD, JPG. If possible both in CMYK and RGB with maintained layers.

Links, images and fonts to the original must be attached (or vectorized/made into paths), even if the images are embedded we want them included separately. Don't forget to check that the links are intact.

Quantity variance

There may be quantity deviations in the number of products ordered. Over- and under-deliveries of up to 20% may occur and are considered accepted.

Quantity deviation

During production, there may be some deviation in the size, thickness and weight of the products. What is considered to be within the scope of approved production is a difference of up to 10% regarding weight and thickness. The size of the product can vary by up to 2-3% both in width and in height from the original size. An order of profile products where at least 2% is misprinted or of an incorrect material is considered defective.

Delivery

By delivery time is meant the time from approved proofreading until the goods arrive at the customer. The delivery time does not include holidays or deviations. It is not possible to cancel an order because there were deviations on a partial delivery of a larger order.

Copyright

Proposals, drafts, drawings, proofreading or other documents linked to tenders belong to Tingstad and may therefore not be shown to third parties.

Graphic costs

When the customer approves the quote, Tingstad's Graphic Designer starts preparing a proof. If the customer wants to cancel the deal after the proofreading has been produced, costs for the graphic work will still be charged with an initial cost of SEK 500, and thereafter SEK 750 per hour worked.
